Queen of Electricity.

Nada Reval is the name of the new arrival, who is known as "La Reine de l'Electricite" or "Chanteuse Electrique." She is said to have an excellent voice and her dances have been pronounced unusually clever, but her chief claim to attention lies in the daring nature and startling effect of her electrical act.

When Nada Reval first comes on the stage the audience sees a good looking, vivacious young woman dressed in the ordinary costume of the stage and a good dancer. Before it fairly gets a good look at her the house is instantly darkened, and the only light to be seen is that shed in splendid effulgence from Reval herself.

Instantly she bursts forth into one blaze of glory. She emits sparks and flame in every direction, and to add to the effect the fire is of all colors. Then the luminous dancer sings and pirouettes as before. The effect is described as remarkable, and it is believed will prove a taking novelty here.

The stage for this performance is covered with wires, into which the current of electricity used for lighting the hall is turned the moments the lights go out. Reval's dress is covered with small electric lamps from head to foot and through her pulsed clothing there is a network of thousands of wires connecting with the lamps. These wires in turn connect with metal plates in the dancer's heels and a current is established as she moves about the stage. Through the same arrangement of wires many other weird effects are said to be produced.

With the dancer comes a German electrician, Herr P. Kronen, who invented the apparatus. When they landed from the steamship Speed, Mlle. Reval and Herr Kronen were not allowed to take away their four cases of electrical instruments until the special agent appointed to attend to the case had sent for an electrician, who pronounced the articles tools of trade.

I saw Mlle. Reval the night she arrived. She told me that she was the only woman alive who could stand the shock which she experienced while doing her electric act. She said that after she and Herr Kronen took possession of the stage, no one was allowed near it nor in the flies. There was no telling, she claimed, what might happen, and the misfortune of persons who did not belong there might mean death.

Mlle. Reval says that while she is dancing the house is kept so dark that the musicians are obliged to use candles. She says this is necessary to enable her to see Herr Kronen and observe his signals. After every act Mlle. Reval says the shoes which she wears are badly burned.

In appearance of the stage the "Electric Queen" is slight in figure, vivacious in manner and with a charming face of the brunette type.—N. Y. Herald.

ELOPEMENT.—Situating near the great pine belt of New Jersey, the pretty little town of New Egypt seldom has anything to occur within its borders to disturb the usual quiet of its residents, but lately all is changed, and every man, woman and child has been thrown into the utmost excitement by the daring elopement of the village belle, Miss Lizzie Fowler, with a man named Beecher, of whom little is known save that he recently traveled with a Pawnee Indian medicine show. The story of their attachment dates back some weeks, when Big Chief Deerfoot, with several other reformed copper-colored scoundrels and several talkative white men, appeared in the town and gave nightly shows, at the same time selling their curative remedies. It was but a few days when the rumor that Beecher was fast becoming the idol of Lizzie's heart was circulated. A vigilant father saw the way things were drifting and ordered Beecher to cease his attentions to his daughter. The last week in June Chief Deerfoot decided to pull up stakes and depart. Then it was that Beecher proved his protestations of love by going to the father and pleading for the hand of Miss Lizzie. The interview terminated almost before it was begun, by the father ordering Beecher to leave and never show his face again. On July 4 Beecher again appeared in the town and set the gossips talking again, but he was not seen near the girl. A strange woman came at the same time and took rooms at the village hotel. She made the acquaintance of Miss Lizzie and became quite friendly with her. On Tuesday last the town was shocked to find that Lizzie had disappeared, and at the same time it was learned that the strange woman had also left for parts unknown. When about to employ detective to seek his daughter, Henry Fowler was almost prostrated as he received from her a letter saying that she had married Beecher in Camden and asking to be forgiven. As yet, however, no answer has been sent the missing girl.
